The German Newspaper Die Zeit published an open letter from various German personalities calling for diplomacy instead of war with Russia:

[Former President] Roman Herzog, [former Vice-President] Antje Vollmer, [Filmmaker] Wim Wenders, [former Chancellor] Gerhard Schröder and many more personalities are calling for a dialogue with Russia.

More than 60 personalities from the realms of politics, economics, culture and the media warn against a war with Russia in a strong appeal and are demanding a new policy of détente in Europe. They are calling on the federal government, members of parliament and the media.

Here are short excerpts from the letter and the names of the signatories:

No one wants war. But North America, the European Union and Russia will inevitably drive us to war if they don't put an end to this dangerous spiral of threats and counter-threats. All Europeans, including Russia, have a common responsibility towards peace and security...

We, the signatories, call on the federal government to take its responsibility towards peace in Europe. We need a new policy of détente in Europe. This is only possible on the basis of equal security for all and equal and mutual respect for partners...

We must not push Russia out of Europe. That would be unhistorical, unreasonable and dangerous for peace. Since the Congress of Vienna in 1814 Russia belongs to the recognized global players in Europe. All who have tried to change that violently have been bloodily defeated...

We appeal to the media, to perform their duty to report without prejudices and be more convincing than ever before. Editorialists and commentators demonize whole nations without giving their story enough value...

The signatories
