

Canadians, Americans deem post-9/11 security laws intrusive, new study finds

By Global Research

Global Research, November 13, 2006

The Canadian Press 13 November 2006

Region: Canada, USA

Theme: Police State & Civil Rights

An international study finds a high level of concern about new anti-terrorism laws.

Almost half of Canadians and an even larger percentage of Americans say they find laws enacted since the 9-11 terror attacks in the U.S. to be intrusive.

The study by Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., looked at how 9,000 people in eight countries view surveillance and privacy.

It's believed to be the first cross-cultural study of its kind.

In other findings, two-thirds of Canadian respondents said they were worried about providing personal information on websites.

About six in 10 Canadians rejected racial profiling at airports for security purposes, while only one-third of Americans objected.

The original source of this article is The Canadian Press
Copyright © Global Research, The Canadian Press, 2006

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Global Research

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca

www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca

