This position of “communications and content specialist” that was advertised broadly yesterday on the internet by Booz Allen Hamilton represents perfectly what is happening to our country as part of the secret takeover of our society—which you are not supposed to notice because you are so caught up with Trump hate or Harris contempt, or some variation of that pre-planned political distraction called the “election.”

The tempting position at BAH is described as providing support for external communications and marketing strategies for workshops, forums, action tracking, and other programs for corporations that have hired Booz Allen Hamilton as a consultant.

Such corporate promotion of events and activities within businesses, between businesses, and for public consumption has a long history, and is neither remarkable nor notable.

However, the small print of the job description gives the entire project away.

The question that should come to mind for anyone reading this job advertisement who still has a brain is: “why does a corporate marketing consultant position require top secret clearance?”

That question is a good one. Top Secret/SCI, the highest level of clearance, is completely unnecessary for anyone handling communications and marketing for corporations. Of course, there could be circumstances in which work for a defense contractor might require security clearance, but that most certainly should not extend to marketing and advertising work using “Microsoft Office Suite Applications, including Word, PowerPoint, and Excel” or “Adobe Creative suite tools, including Illustrator, Photoshop, InDesign, and Audition.”

The reason that clearance is required for corporate advertising is that secret governance after the 9/11 incident and the COVID 19 operation has extended from the Department of Defense and intelligence agencies, to State, Treasury, Energy and Homeland Security, to the entire federal government, and increasingly to state government and to the defense and security contractors, often located outside the US in places like Israel, and to private intelligence/marketing/consulting firms like Booz Allen Hamilton. In short, what government and corporations do to the nation, and its citizens, is secret even from lawyers and judges.

Corporations can show you a memorandum of understanding they have with the government and they can act as if the classified codicil to the MoU does not exist—even though it describes what the corporation actually does, and what the true chain of command is. No one is entitled to know anything and in effect there is no judiciary any more.

So why do you need top secret/SCI clearance to work in marketing? Because much of the administration and finances of multinational corporations, from Coca Cola to Lockheed Martin, is labeled as classified using various bogus government-tied “security concerns” these days.

What does that mean specifically? It means that orders can be given within the corporation which are classified and for which you will go to jail for disclosing to anyone, and be fined hundreds of thousands of dollars too.

That means that as an employee, if you get an order to promote Covid 19 as a life-threatening virus, Covid vaccines as a scientific miracle drug, the 9/11 commission’s report as a scientifically sound study of the facts, or any other fraud that the rich and powerful may want to impose on citizens, you are free to do so, and you must do so, or else you will be brutally punished for not doing so without anyone ever knowing. No one who gets in the way of corporate power will go unpunished.

In such an ecosystem, it makes perfect sense to require a security clearance for marketing. After all, the images and storylines that are fed to the public, and to employees of government and corporations, are the front line in the war on truth, and the destruction of civil society.
