Will Iran be bombarded from Georgia?

The experts are sure that precisely Iran will become the main issue of discussions in Washington as the US intends to use Georgian territory for actions against Iran. And it is not accidental that the US provide much money for military airports in Vaziani, Marneuli and Batumi.

"I do not accept Saakashvili participating in an anti-Iranian campaign in return for keeping his position", ex-Georgian President Eduard Shevardnadze considers. "It may become a real catastrophe for our country. War against Iran must not be led from our territory."

Today, on January 30 Georgian President Mikhail Saakashvili will meet his American counterpart Barack Obama. According to experts, Georgia's possible participation in the military operation against Iran will be the main issue of the discussions. Mr. Saakashvili seems to be ready to make Georgian territory available for the conflict against Tehran and he will explain its readiness with the necessity to be protected from the "Russian military danger," Russian kommersant.ru writes.

According to the source, the Georgian opposition claims that the upcoming Georgian parliamentary and presidential elections will be another theme of the discussions. "Obama will claim that the parliamentary elections in 2012 and the presidential election in 2013 passed fairly and without falsifications”, a representative of the political party New Rights, Davit Gamkrelidze, informed Kommersant...

As independent expert, George Nodia, considers that “the first invitation to Saakashvili from the US President is not connected with the elections, but is in regard to the regional situation, cooperation between the USA and Georgia in the security sphere including from the point of view of Iranian processes.”

The experts are sure that precisely Iran will become the main issue of discussions in Washington as the US intends to use Georgian territory for actions against Iran. And it is not accidental that the US provide much money for military airports in Vaziani, Marneuli and Batumi.

The experts have no doubts that Mikheil Saakashvili will agree with the US. “Georgia will be more loyal in case of war with Iran compared with Turkey and other Iranian neighbors,” conflicts expert Paata Zakareishvili is assured. Tbilisi has demonstrated its devotion to Washington for many years. In 2012 Georgian forces in Afghanistan will be increased and will include 1,600-1,700 soldiers and officers and will become the biggest contingent in Afghanistan of countries which are not NATO members. [Exceeding NATO Contact Country partner Australia’s 1,550 troops.] “I do not accept Saakashvili participating in an anti-Iranian campaign in return for keeping his position”, ex-Georgian President Eduard Shevardnadze considers. “It may become a real catastrophe for our country. War against Iran must not be led from our territory.”

Anyway, many military experts are sure that Georgia is unable to refuse to assist the US if the latter wants it. “Of course it will be more comfortable for the Americans to bombard targets in Northern Iranian partly from the South Caucasus. But Georgia has no common border with Iran and Armenia and Azerbaijan will hardly agree to provide the use of their territory,” editor-in-chief of the Arsenal military-analytic magazine Irakli Aladashvili said.

“Besides this, South Caucasian air territory is completely supervised by Russian systems, which are situated in Armenia, Abkhazia and South Ossetia. The US may lose the element of the surprise. The Russian side will just inform Iran about the approach of the American planes to their territory.”

Saakashvili meets with Hillary Clinton

Georgia is a valued partner and interest in Georgia is very great, said US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton as she welcomed President of Georgia Mikheil Saakashvili on Wednesday.

“Georgia is a valued partner. They are actively participating in Afghanistan, where Georgian soldiers are showing great courage and professionalism. We are pursuing a system of consultations to determine the way forward on further trade and investment. There’s a lot of work going on in...defense and security cooperation...,” Mrs. Clinton said.

In his turn Mikheil Saakashvili thanked the Secretary of State for the great support which Georgia has always had from the side of the United States.

“Thank you, Madam Secretary. First of all, I would like to express the utmost gratitude for your strong support, not just in words but in action, for Georgia’s territorial integrity and sovereignty and independence, because it’s lots of daily work. It’s a great struggle. Sometimes it’s like an uphill struggle because it’s against the forces that are trying to undermine us. And your personal participation, President Obama’s personal backing for it was – it goes without saying – and that’s something that we really appreciate a lot. And certainly, I also walked out from this office, and also from the Oval Office where we were also present totally elated because I heard everything I wanted to hear. And I mean, it’s – I’ve been in there before. But this time, because the country has also matured – my country has also matured up to the challenges – I think we now are moving to another level in cooperation. And with free trade agreement, nobody could have imagined that Georgia would ever start to qualify for that a few years ago. The next level of defense cooperation – and we are proud to serve with you in Afghanistan – was unimaginable a couple of years ago,” Saakashvili said.

The meeting was held at 3 p.m. local time and the president and the Secretary Clinton made statements for media.

Georgian Defense Minister Meets U.S. Secretary of Defense

Tbilisi: Georgian Defense Minister, Bacho Akhalaia, met with U.S. Secretary of Defense, Leon Panetta, in Brussels on February 2 on the sidelines of a meeting of defense ministers from NATO members and 20 partner states, the Georgian Ministry of Defense said.

It said in a statement that the meeting was “a follow up to the agreement reached at the meeting between President Saakashvili and President Obama at the White House” on January 30.

The U.S. has “expressed its readiness to extend assistance with regard to enhancing Georgia’s defense capabilities, which implies new levels of cooperation, deepening existing relations in key areas and implementation of specific training and assistance programs,” the Georgian MoD said.

Defense Minister Akhalaia said that from now on the defense cooperation with the U.S. would focus not only on training of Georgian troops for the Afghan deployment, but also on enhancing and improving Georgia’s “self-defense capabilities.”

“We are talking about an absolutely new phase of relations, which means that if until now we were focused on military training and military assistance, which was basically directed to our units participating in the ISAF operation, from now on we will have the opportunity to think about those types of assistance which will be focused on the development of the entire armed forces that will ultimately contribute to the strengthening of the country’s self-defense capabilities,” Akhalaia said.

The Georgian MoD said that consultations would continue to discuss “specific fields of cooperation in details.”

Georgian Defense Minister Visits NATO HQ

Tbilisi: Georgia’s Defense Minister, Bacho Akhalaia, is in Brussels where defense ministers from NATO members and 20 partner states are meeting on February 2-3 to discuss a range of issues, including Afghanistan.

Akhalaia is expected to hold bilateral talks with U.S. Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta on the sideline of the defense ministerial meeting, Georgian MoD’s spokesperson Salome Makharadze told Civil.ge by phone from Brussels on February 2.

Georgia’s Ambassador to the U.S., Temur Yakobashvili, said after the meeting between the U.S. and Georgian presidents in Washington on January 30 that it had been agreed to hold consultations, including between the Georgian Defense Minister and the U.S. Defense Secretary on bringing cooperation over “Georgia’s self-defense capabilities to a new level”, which would help Georgia “to better defend” itself.

Georgia’s Deputy PM and State Minister for European and Euro-Atlantic Integration, Giorgi Baramidze, said on February 1, that the “time has come when U.S.-Georgia military cooperation is elevated in essence to a new stage.” He told Rustavi 2 TV that this new level of cooperation included not only partnership in international operations, like in Afghanistan, but also “giving more focus to Georgia’s self-defense.”

Russia Says ‘Strongly Against’ Arms Supply to Georgia

Tbilisi: Russia’s Deputy Defense Minister, Anatoly Antonov, told journalists on February 2 that U.S. arms supplies to Georgia, if such a decision had really been taken, would destabilize the Caucasus region.

“We are strongly against of any kind of arms supplies to the Saakashvili’s regime. If such a decision was taken, it will destabilize the situation in the Caucasus,” RIA Novosti news agency reported, quoting Antonov on February 2.

Since the meeting between the Georgian and U.S. presidents in the White House on January 30, Georgian senior officials including President Saakashvili stressed a number of times that an agreement had been reached to deepen defense cooperation.

While the Georgian officials stop short of mentioning “arms sales” or the “supply of arms”, they are speaking of a “new level” of defense cooperation, “elevating defense cooperation to a new stage” and deepening defense cooperation to go beyond training of Georgian troops for the Afghan deployment by “focusing on enhancing and improving Georgia’s self-defense capabilities.”

After meeting with his Georgian counterpart, President Obama said on January 30: “We have talked about how we will continue to strengthen our defense cooperation, and there are a wide range of areas where we are working together.”

After that meeting, President Saakashvili thanked the U.S. president for, as he put it, “talking about Georgia’s self-defense capabilities and developing them.”
