

Did the US Co-opt OWS in Order to Legitimize Egypt's Flawed Elections?

By Jacob Levich

Global Research, November 25, 2011

MRZine 22 November 2011

Region: Middle East & North Africa

Theme: Intelligence

Although Occupy Wall Street protesters have so far resisted attempts by the Democratic Party to co-opt their movement, a New York City "General Assembly" was bamboozled by what may be a State Department and/or NED initiative aimed at granting legitimacy to Egypt's flawed election process.

According to a November 16 story in Ahram Online and links collected by blogger Benjamin Doherty (at bitly.com/bundles/bangpound/4), OWS in New York City agreed to send a delegation of election monitors to Egypt after a mysterious activist flew in from Washington with a proposal in hand. The New York City OWS swiftly approved the initiative at a November 10 "General Assembly" in Zuccotti Park and allocated $29,000.

Maria Dayton, the apparent author of the proposal, boasts of connections to the U.S. State Department, the National Endowment for Democracy, and Freedom House on her LinkedIn profile (since deleted but preserved by Doherty, at cld.bangpound.org/2G423i2t2R2f2q1q331K).

Each of these institutions has a longstanding history of subverting and co-opting popular movements in the interests of U.S. foreign policy.

Dayton represented her proposal to OWS as a request from "Egyptian civil society groups."

But many Egyptian revolutionaries are shocked by the initiative and are wondering who is behind it. See, for example, the "Statement by Comrades from Cairo in Response to OWS Proposal to Send Election Monitors."

According to the Ahram Online story:

The Occupy Wall Street movement was reportedly invited to observe the elections by "Egyptian civil society groups" and a founding member of the April 6 Youth Movement, Asmaa Mahfouz.

However, aside from one signed letter from Mahmoud El-Sawy at the Horeyya Coalition, there appears to be no direct and confirmed communication from Egypt to the General Assembly.

"Monitoring the elections is, at worst, legitimising the military junta's grasp over the Egyptian process, at best it's naïve," says Ranya (not her real name), one of the authors of the Egyptian letter to OWS. "I think people were swept up with eagerness."

Unbeknown to the OWS movement, this comes at a time when activists are considering boycotting the Egyptian elections because, as Comrades in Cairo explained in their letter, these elections can only produce a “puppet parliament.”

There is, of course, no indication that the persons who happened to be present at the November 10th Zuccotti Park “General Assembly” of OWS were conscious of government machinations behind the proposal, or that they intended to do anything subversive of the Egyptian people’s struggles. But the U.S. State Department and the Egyptian junta can be expected to seize upon OWS “monitoring” as lending legitimacy to the upcoming elections, no matter how flawed the process or disappointing the results.

Jacob Levich, who lives in New York City, has written for MRZine on military issues and tweets as @cordeliers.

The original source of this article is MRZine
Copyright © Jacob Levich, MRZine, 2011

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Jacob Levich

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca