

Flashback to the Greek Debt Bailout Referendum: When ‘No’ Became a ‘Yes’

By Tasos Kokkinidis

Global Research, July 09, 2018

GreekReporter.com 5 July 2018

Region: Europe

Theme: History, Police State & Civil Rights

On the third anniversary of the referendum to decide whether Greece was to accept the bailout conditions imposed by its creditors, the political landscape of the country looks so much different.

Former firebrands Alexis Tsipras and his SYRIZA-led government which orchestrated the referendum and urged people to reject the conditions by voting ‘No’ on July 5, 2015, have since made a huge U-turn, agreeing to a third bailout program and becoming its most enthusiastic supporter.

Greece is due to complete the third bailout in August, but critics say that tough austerity measures, including pension cuts will be implemented in the next few years, as the country will enter a long period of “enhanced surveillance” by its creditors.

The referendum was announced by Tsipras in the early morning of 27 June 2015, and ratified the following day by the parliament and the president.

From the outset, he saw the referendum as a negotiating maneuver. The idea of a referendum that would “strengthen” the Greek position in the negotiations with the Troika had been floated in the spring of 2015.

“Our aim is for the referendum to be followed by negotiations for which we will be better armed,” he said in an interview on state television.

It was the first referendum to be held since the republic referendum of 1974, and the only one in modern Greek history not to concern the form of government.

As a result of the referendum, the bailout conditions were rejected by a majority of over 61 percent to 39 percent approving, with the “No” vote winning in all of Greece’s regions.

Supporters of the “No” vote danced for joy in the streets of the Greek capital. But, Tsipras refused to join the celebrations.

He declined to make some kind of “victory appearance”, he called meetings with opposition leaders to forge a common position and dismissed Yanis Varoufakis, his finance minister whose six-month negotiating tactics had infuriated his European counterparts.

Varoufakis later described the atmosphere in the PM's office on the night of the referendum as "downcast", as if Tsipras and his aides dreaded the emphatic victory of the "No" vote.

Three days following the referendum, Athens "formally asked for a three-year bailout from the eurozone's rescue fund and pledged to start implementing some economic-policy overhauls" beginning by mid-July 2015.

European finance leaders scheduled a "crisis summit" on 12 July to consider the request. The Greek request included a "drastic turnaround" for Tsipras regarding "pension cuts, tax increases and other austerity measures".

On Monday, 13 July, the SYRIZA-led government of Greece accepted a bailout package that contained larger pension cuts and tax increases than the one rejected by Greek voters in the referendum.

*

All images in this article are from the author.

The original source of this article is GreekReporter.com
Copyright © Tasos Kokkinidis, GreekReporter.com, 2018

---

**Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page**

**Become a Member of Global Research**

Articles by: **Tasos Kokkinidis**

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca
www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca