

Former US-NATO Commander Wants to Put Troops on the Ground in Ukraine

Retired Gen. Philip Breedlove is the latest high profile official to catch the war fever and advocate direct U.S. conflict with Russia.

By Kelley Beaucar Vlahos Global Research, April 26, 2022 Responsible Statecraft 25 April 2022 Region: Europe, Russia and FSU, USA Theme: Intelligence, US NATO War Agenda In-depth Report: UKRAINE REPORT

All Global Research articles can be read in 51 languages by activating the "Translate Website" drop down menu on the top banner of our home page (Desktop version).

To receive Global Research's Daily Newsletter (selected articles), click here.

Visit and follow us on Instagram, Twitter and Facebook. Feel free to repost and share widely Global Research articles.

Former NATO top commander Gen. Philip Breedlove is the latest big name to come out for putting troops on the ground in Ukraine. Breedlove, who has been angling for weeks for a more muscular policy against Russia, told The Times of London that it's time for real action. And he may have the ear of the White House: the article says he's named as one of "several high-ranking retired commanders advising the Biden administration on Ukraine."

"So what could the West do? Well, right now there are no Russian troops west of the Dnieper River. So why don't we put Nato troops into western Ukraine to carry out humanitarian missions and to set up a forward arms supply base?"

Of course it wouldn't stop there. Most likely Russia will react aggressively, if not explosively, since setting up "a forward arms supply base" would be fully entering this war on the side of Ukraine. NATO would be a co-belligerent in every way, with its 40,000 troops now stationed on alliance's eastern front considered future enemy combatants. At the end of April, the Pentagon mobilized some 14,000 troops, along with F-35 strike fighters and Apache helicopters to Poland, Hungary, and the Baltics. A total of 100,000 U.S. troops now spread across Europe would no doubt be on some level of alert if NATO entered the fray.

Breedlove, who served as NATO's Supreme Allied Commander from 2013 to 2016, said this move was essential for the protection of Odesa, a strategic Ukrainian port city on the Black Sea.

"If Odesa falls, Ukraine will become a land-locked country with no access to the Black Sea. The impact on Ukraine's GDP would be huge. It would be ruinous for the economy," he told the Times. "The West is saying it is providing everything Ukraine needs to defend against the Russians. But the people of Mariupol had to fight without Stingers [anti-aircraft missiles]. That was a failure by the West."

He added:

"Now we need to make sure that the Ukrainians win the battle for Odesa."

Earlier this month, Breedlove was complaining that the West's fears of nuclear war were working in Putin's favor.

"We have been so worried about nuclear weapons and World War III that we have allowed ourselves to be fully deterred. And [Putin], frankly, is completely undeterred. He has switched into the most horrific war against the citizens of Ukraine, it is beyond criminal at this point."

U.S. weakness on this score bleeds over to our relations with Iran, North Korea, and China, he asserts:

"The message we're sending to the entire world is if you get a nuclear weapon, you're going to have a certain reaction from the West and certainly from the United States...[that's all]. And I don't think that's the message we want to send them."

Of course, a month before this Breedlove said he was "not advocating a war" when asked about what appeared to be his support for a "humanitarian no fly zone." Today, advocating NATO involvement directly in Ukraine would be a giant leap beyond that, and who knows what kind of opening for others coming down with similar war fever in Washington. Last week, Delaware Sen. Chris Coons was forced to walk back comments he made that suggested he too, was in favor of putting troops on the ground against Russia.

*

Note to readers: Please click the share buttons above or below. Follow us on Instagram, Twitter and Facebook. Feel free to repost and share widely Global Research articles.

Featured image: General Philip Breedlove, then Supreme Allied Commander Europe, in 2014. (NATO)

The original source of this article is Responsible Statecraft Copyright © Kelley Beaucar Vlahos, Responsible Statecraft, 2022

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Kelley Beaucar Vlahos Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca

www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca