

Ireland's News Media. RTÉ TV Fully Complicit in Endorsing the 'Pandemic' Narrative

Public Broadcaster – Undeclared Earnings Bad, Endorsing the Great Reset Good?

*Over the past several weeks, Ireland has been rocked by a scandal related to the significant undeclared earnings of Ryan Tubridy, the most prominent presenter on the public broadcaster of the 26-County State, RTÉ, and the long-time host of its flagship talk show, The Late Late Show, until his departure earlier this year – prior to the revelations related to his salary becoming public knowledge.*

In response, Director General of RTÉ Dee Forbes tendered her resignation, and both Tubridy and his agent Noel Kelly have been brought before a government tribunal to account for the undeclared earnings, something that has received significant media coverage across Ireland, including OJ Simpson-style live television coverage of the proceedings.

What has been noticeable however is how this extensive media attention lies in stark contrast to the virtually non-existent mainstream media coverage of RTÉ's endorsement of the World Economic Forum's Great Reset initiative over the past three years, intended to usher in a totalitarian global corporate dictatorship, where technology is used to stifle and censor debate.

From the outset of the 'Covid Pandemic' in March 2020, Ireland, like numerous other countries, introduced stringent lockdowns under the guise of preventing the spread of an alleged virus. In reality, the forced closure of vast swathes of society served the purpose of making it virtually impossible for smaller businesses to operate, thus creating a greater dependence on corporate outlets such as Amazon. As a result, the global lockdowns saw the greatest upwards transfer of wealth from the working and middle-classes in history, with corporate elements receiving upwards of \$1tn in profit.

With Taoiseach Leo Varadkar being a WEF 'Young Global Leader', RTÉ was fully complicit in endorsing the 'Pandemic' narrative, WEF-linked scientist Luke O'Neill being a regular guest on The Late Late Show under Ryan Tubridy in order to further its promotion. The public broadcaster would also condemn Irish anti-lockdown protests as being 'organised by the far-right' in lock-step with similar mainstream media descriptions being ascribed to protests in New Zealand, France and Canada – each country also being under the respective rule of WEF 'Young Global Leaders', Jacinda Ardern, Emmanuel Macron and Justin Trudeau.

What would be perhaps the most sinister aspect of RTÉ's two-year promotion of the 'Pandemic' narrative however, was the use of children to promote uptake of the 'Covid' Vaccine during the 2020 edition of The Late Late Toy Show, a seasonal edition of the programme used to showcase that Christmas's latest toy selection, one that is traditionally very popular amongst families with young children.

Indeed, Ryan Tubridy himself would later double down on his promotion of the vaccine by infamously using his radio platform to encourage listeners to disinvite guests from weddings who had not been vaccinated, his incendiary remarks coming amidst a time when access to bars, restaurants, hairdressers and gyms in the southern Irish state, was forbidden to those who had not yet received a 'Covid' jab and the resulting digital QR code that would subsequently be placed on their smartphone.

This enforced segregation, in Ireland and further afield, served as a dry-run for the introduction of mandatory digital ID, a key part of the 'Fourth Industrial Revolution' that the WEF envisages will come about as a result of the Great Reset, with the ultimate goal being a cashless society. One where the corporate-government alliance has full control over its citizen's financial transactions, and can easily impose sanctions against those it deems to be dissidents.

Indeed, this very situation would play out during last year's Freedom Convoy in Canada, when Justin Trudeau would use emergency legislation to freeze the bank accounts of Truckers protesting against his decision to mandate that truck drivers re-entering Canada from the US had to be vaccinated. A truly dystopian move, and one that could be far more easily implemented in a society with no physical cash.

RTÉ's two-year endorsement of the introduction of such a totalitarian society has come in for little criticism since the sudden collapse of the 'Pandemic' narrative last January however, the undeclared earnings of its chief propagandist being a far more newsworthy item it would seem.
