Liz Truss it not only ignorant with regard to nuclear weapons and their devastating impacts, she does not know the geography of the Russian Federation, claiming that Rostov on the Don as well as Voronezh belong to Ukraine; it's like saying that Manchester belongs to Scotland:

Russia's Kommersant newspaper quoted two diplomatic sources as saying that during their closed-door meeting on Thursday Lavrov had asked Truss if she recognised Russian sovereignty over Rostov and Voronezh - two regions in the south of the country where Russia has been building up its forces.

Kommersant said Truss replied that Britain would never recognise them as Russian, and had to be corrected by her ambassador. (Reuters report)

My message to the Conservative party, do not vote for an Ignoramus who could lead Britain and the World into the unthinkable, a nuclear war which threatens the future of humanity.

Liz Truss confirmed she is "ready" to press the UK's nuclear button if need be - and Twitter is not reassured.

Truss is the frontrunner in the race to be the next Conservative Party leader. If successfully elected by the membership, she would also become the next prime minister, giving her powers over Britain's nuclear bombs.

They are considered the most dangerous weapons in the world.

Truss was speaking at a hustings event in Birmingham, when host John Pienaar asked her if she would give the order "to unleash nuclear weapons" from Trident.

He added: "It would mean global annihilation. I won't ask you if you would press the button, you'll say yes, but faced with that task I would feel physically sick.

"How does that thought make you feel?"

Truss replied: "I think it's an important duty of the prime minister and I'm ready to do it. I'm ready to do that."

She has previously indicated that she would renew the nuclear deterrent, which aims to "deter the most extreme threats to our national security and way of life", during her leadership campaign.

But her words last night were particularly chilling considering the ongoing war between nuclear power Russia and its European neighbour Ukraine, which is closely allied with the UK.

Truss is also the current foreign secretary and was already singled out by the Kremlin back in February for making "absolutely unacceptable statements" about clashes between Nato and Russia.

Moscow then used Truss' words to put Russia's nuclear deterrent on high alert.

Asked how she would feel if in a situation where as PM she had to deploy a nuclear weapon, Liz Truss said: "I think it's an important duty of the Prime Minister. I'm ready to do that."

Pressed on how it would make her feel, she adds: "I'm ready to do it."

Rishi Sunak, Truss' competitor, was reportedly not asked the same question during Tuesday's hustings.

It's fair to say that the leadership hopeful's comments did not land among Twitter users, as people were torn between fearing for the UK's future and being exasperated that Truss is not focusing on the cost of living crisis at hand.

At least if she ushers in global annihilation it will be captured on Instagram. <https://t.co/6XOt0Bb7gZ>

how long does this tory leadership election have to go on? just want them to pick one already, stop this increasingly batshit pledge-off before they both commit us all to a program of ritual seppuku <https://t.co/JE8Av1Sric>

The planet is shifting rapidly towards increasing climate and finite resource based security concerns. Countries that thrive and prosper in this era will focus on adapting and creating sustainable ways of living, whilst encouraging others to do the same.

Holy moly. The Truss, who can't find her way out of a room or hold a phone the right way round says she is ready to press the nuclear button.

We should all be very worried. <https://t.co/2UaiZimZWA>

This is such a weird obsession the British media have.

Constantly making sure politicians are happy and willing to kill millions of people.

Proper strange behaviour. <https://t.co/PflaMcKku3>
