Moscow could retaliate with similar measures if Germany decides to use frozen Russian assets to help Ukraine rebuild, a senior Russian official warned on Thursday.

"The German government has decided to shift the problems that their predecessors created onto our country. To this end, they plan to confiscate Russian assets to rebuild Ukraine," said Vyacheslav Volodin, speaker of the State Duma, Russia's lower house of parliament.

"We have the right to take similar actions in relation to assets of Germany and other states," he said in a Telegram post.
