“Writers such as Morningstar are always going to be targeted and they will always face hostility from the status quo. That is the nature of what they do. They pull away the curtain that hides the horrors and malevolence of those individuals, corporations, and political institutions that oppress the majority of the planet. And many do not want those curtains removed. Her work deserves the upmost support.” – John Stepling, American playwright, screenwriter and teacher [1]

It appears that the attention of the world will be on the 26th United Nations Conference of the Parties (COP26) summit to be held in Glasgow starting on October 31. [2]

According to The Guardian, the world nations, bound by treaty in the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), agree to “avoid dangerous climate change” by reducing greenhouse gas emissions established as the principal component of our distorted weather conditions. The conditions of the Paris Agreement to reduce or curb existing emissions by 2030 with a target of net zero by 2050 will simply not be acceptable as a way of keeping the global temperature below 2C, let alone the more ambitious 1.5C. [3]

So, with the UN Secretary-General saying the recent Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change working group’s recent report was a “code red for humanity,” pressure from both the high level organizers at the top to the legions if environmental activists at the bottom will definitely collude in their efforts to ratchet up our commitments to our planet while our narrow margin of meaningful climate action has been spent![4]

The problem with every eager steward of the planet is that ultimately they are not truly directing the world's governments. Voices from the margins of the environmental and social justice movements are trying to accentuate the fact that major economic interests not only play a massive role in greenhouse gas production (for example, 100 companies produce 1 trillion tons, or nearly 71 percent of all greenhouse gas emissions) but are directing the 'remedies' that largely transfer the responsibilities onto the masses.

Worse, the final result is not even expected to slow down the assault on Earth. Just take us to a re-opening of a brand new capitalist future adorned, no doubt, on a suitable, sustainable and 'green' path.

The passion to bring awareness to this kind of swindle has been the passion of the special guest of the program. Cory Morningstar has been outlining these realities for more than a decade. This week, she appears on the Global Research News Hour to expand more on her research into not only the environmental movement's 'wolf in sheep's clothing', but also the aims of the so-called 'Sustainability' goals, the realities of racialized 'development' policies, and the ways in which COVID vaccines and COVID passports also play a disguised role in being 'ecologically correct.'

Cory Morningstar is an independent investigative journalist, writer and environmental activist, focusing on global ecological collapse and political analysis of the non-profit industrial complex. Her recent writings can be found on Wrong Kind of Green, The Art of Annihilation, and Counterpunch. Her writing has also been published by Bolivia Rising and Cambio, the official newspaper of the Pluri-national State of Bolivia. Her series, The Manufacturing of Greta Thunberg - For Consent is posted at Wrong Kind of Green and at her site The Art of Annihilation. She lives in London, Ontario, Canada
