At least, one writes, there will not be the heartache of watching such a team fail - as did the widely hailed Blair and Obama - beset by vested interest and failing to fulfil expectations. Instead on past record there will be:

- more austerity for the 'have-nots', continuing as senior bankers flourish - despite causing the economic crash;
- declining public services;
- sub-standard education and training for the young from poorer families;
- 'aspirational' housing built on green spaces as council housing lists grow;
- the revolving door between big business and government continuing to spin, ensuring that decisions are made in favour of the rich;
- courting of foreign investment
- more poorly monitored, polluting incinerators;
- permission given for fracking in the politically opposed north;
- exploitation of smaller food producers, favouring food for export;
- lavish expenditure on HS2 and Trident;
- private companies entering the NHS and putting profit first;
- increasing export of armaments, causing mayhem in other countries;
- assistance for America's military aggression.

And perhaps more:
