

Somalia: 'African Solution' or Subjugation?

By Abukar Arman Global Research, May 15, 2014 Region: sub-Saharan Africa

One of the most potent intoxicants in Africa today is the canned phrase "African solutions for African problems."

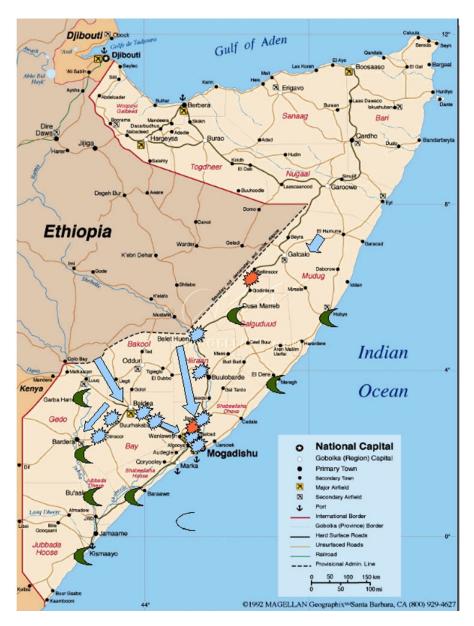

While 'ASAP' is an acronym that connotes a timely and efficient result, most if not all, operations that are veiled with the romantic motto, have proven that they are not indigenously conceived, funded, or driven.

Since this phrase came into the African lexicon in 2007, it has proven no substantive value to the continent or its people. Contrary to what it was originally intended, the phrase has been taken hostage by domestic political sloganeers and foreign elements eager to advance zero-sum interests. It also became the ideological impetus that helped establish multi-national African forces such AMISOM.

As is clear in Somalia, this kind of politico-military system—especially when neighboring states are directly involved—routinely contain or 'solve' a problem by creating several newer ones that perpetuate dependency, exploitation and indeed subjugation.

"When one asks a powerful neighbor to come to aid and defend one with his forces...These forces may be good in themselves, but they are always dangerous for those who borrow them, for if they lose you are defeated, and if they conquer you remain their prisoner," forewarned Machiavelli several centuries ago- a man who knew a thing or two about exploitation.

In Somalia; not only did our current leadership, and that of the last decade, fail to heed the aforementioned warning, they obediently competed and outperformed each other to prove themselves as unyielding loyal subjects. Some have even openly said that "Addis" (Capital of Ethiopia) "is the new mecca" and that no Somali can pursue a political career in his own country without first getting Ethiopia's blessings. Already, Ethiopia has installed a number of its staunch cohorts in the current government and (along with Kenya) has been handpicking virtually all of the new regional governors, mayors, etc.

Byproduct of Vicious Fratricide

Recently, while reading on poverty, I came across anthropologist Oscar Lewis' (controversial) theory The Culture of Poverty in which he theorizes while poverty might be systemic, generational poverty fosters unique self-perpetuating value system that ultimately becomes engrained in the poor person's way of life- poverty.

People who are altered by that attitudinal phenomenon commonly have "a strong feeling of marginality, of helplessness, of dependency, of not belonging. They are like aliens in their own country... (and) have very little sense of history." I could not help but reflect on our own self-defeating, self-perpetuating predicament.

As in Stockholm syndrome, a good number of the Somali leadership have become emotionally and politically bonded with the very power that abused them and fueled enmity between them (off and on) since the seventies.

Capitalizing on that psychological advantage, Ethiopia has managed to get the exclusive right to set up an embassy inside the Villa Somalia (government compound), independent "consulates" in Somaliland and Puntland, and independently operating intelligence command centers in each of these Balkanized political entities. To further complicate matters, Ethiopia has signed independent "military treaty" with each of these political entities.

Yet, the current leadership—as those before them—seems content with such arrangement. That, needless to say, motivated Kenya to follow the same effective strategy – isolate the center from the periphery, and lure the latter entities into deals that they can't refuse.

Exposing the Lame duck(s)

Only a few weeks into the Ethiopia led (AMISOM) military operation; the UNSGR warns the next violence that targets the UN may force it out of Somalia. "I am deeply conscious that if we make a mistake in our security presence and posture, and suffer a significant attack, particularly on the U.N., this is likely to mean to us withdrawing from Somalia," said Kay. To underscore his message, he adds this: "There are scenarios in which if we take further significant losses, then that would have a strategic effect on our mission."

Was this a reckless telegraphing intended to implicitly dare al-Shabaab with a 'Go ahead, make my day; force us back to Nairobi' message? Or was it a cryptic warning intended to preempt the Ethiopia/Kenya tag-team from getting too creative in their covert operations intended to manipulate facts on the ground?

While you ponder, consider adding this into your calculus: The UN deliberately bypassed AMISOM when it commissioned a Ugandan contingent of over 400 Special Forces to guard its facilities and staff. This particular contingent is neither officially part nor does it take any orders from AMISOM. Why?

Because, the controversial implanting of Ethiopia and Kenya into AMISOM has change its dynamic from a peacekeeping force into a political technical vehicle.

Ambassador Kay is too experienced to make haphazard security-related statements. He was well aware of what he was saying and where he was saying at. He affirms that awareness in his presentation. Between the lines he was signaling his frustration with the Ethiopia-driven AMISOM, and how he and UNSOM ended up biting the dust. I have argued before that the Ethiopia/Kenya and US/UK interests are in an immanent collision course.

Musical Chairs and Revolving Doors

Though the next election/selection is more than two years away, the usual suspects of mostly political conformists who are devoid of any transformative ideas or strategies are already in their hysterical maneuvering and counter-maneuvering routine. They are dutifully eager to demonstrate their capacity to perpetuate the status quo.

Intoxicated with the rhetoric that our 'good neighbors are making self-sacrifice for us' these politicians are determined to hinge the future of our nation on the question of 'Who would be the next President and the next Prime Minister?' rather than 'What new vision and strategy would these individuals bring in order to help heal or repair our broken nation?'

Against that backdrop, on May 5th, over 100 MP have signed a non-binding resolution demanding the resignation of President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud or face impeachment.

Make no mistake, Somalia is held in a nasty headlock by a neighborhood tag-team unmistakably motivated by zero-sum objective. It is their so-called African solution (not so much of the extremist group al-Shabaab) that is setting the Horn on fire.

Against that backdrop, our IDPs (Internally Displaced Politicians) continue on their respective pipedreams. Of course, where there is no vision, neither strategy, nor political will, nor continuity matters.

Abukar Arman is the former Somalia Special Envoy to the United States and a widely published foreign policy analyst.

The original source of this article is Global Research Copyright © Abukar Arman, Global Research, 2014

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Abukar Arman

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca