

Student Booted as Newspaper's Editor-in-chief over Mask Mandate Editorial

By Ben Zeisloft

Global Research, October 05, 2021

Campus Reform 1 October 2021

Region: USA

Theme: Law and Justice

All Global Research articles can be read in 51 languages by activating the "Translate Website" drop down menu on the top banner of our home page (Desktop version).

Visit and follow us on Instagram at @crg_globalresearch.

Maddison Farris, editor-in-chief of a student newspaper at Oklahoma State University, was forced to resign after criticizing the school's mask policy.

"I think that this whole event truly shows that not all opinions are valued and that diversity of thought is falsely advertised here," Farris told Campus Reform.

On September 9, Farris wrote a column for The O'Colly explaining that she had been removed from a classroom for not wearing a mask.

Farris had previously researched Senate Bill 658, which affirms that a mask cannot be required within a school setting in Oklahoma. She noted that "multiple phone calls with the governor's office confirmed what I already knew."

"If I believed that it was just a mask, then, of course, I would simply wear it for an hour or two and then go about my day," Farris explained.

"But it is more than a mask. It's control. It's control over my choices, desires and body," she continued. "I will not allow any institution to take away my right to decide for myself what is best and to make my own decisions, or to take away the rights and decisions of others."

Two days later, The O'Colly's editorial board added a "correction" to the article stressing that Farris' article was indeed an opinion piece. It claimed that though Farris' explanation of the law was "misleading," they supported Farris' freedom of expression.

"As American citizens, we affirm our belief in the First Amendment and the right as journalists to express our personal opinions no matter if our viewpoint is different from those around us," the correction stated.

Nevertheless, Farris submitted a letter of "forced resignation," explaining that she had been called into a September 13 meeting with the rest of the editors and pressed into leaving her post.

Farris told Campus Reform that although most students at Oklahoma State support free speech, but there is a “portion of students who value free speech until it makes them uncomfortable.”

Campus Reform reached out to Farris, The O’Colly, and Oklahoma State University for comment; this article will be updated accordingly.

*

Note to readers: Please click the share buttons above or below. Follow us on Instagram, @crg_globalresearch. Forward this article to your email lists. Crosspost on your blog site, internet forums. etc.

Ben Zeisloft is a Campus Reform Student Editor and Pennsylvania Senior Campus Correspondent, reporting on liberal bias and abuse for Campus Reform. He is studying Finance and Marketing at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. Benjamin also writes for The UPenn Statesman and the Wharton International Business Review.

Featured image is from Campus Reform

The original source of this article is Campus Reform
Copyright © Ben Zeisloft, Campus Reform, 2021

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: Ben Zeisloft

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca