Global Research welcomes submissions of news and opinion articles. Sources and references should be indicated where applicable with a view to ensuring a high degree of accuracy. Texts must be carefully edited prior to submission. Global Research has the discretion to edit articles and undertake minor modifications prior to publication.

Articles should always be sent in the body of your email message as well as in a word attachment. With regard to style and format: single space default font, no paragraph indentation, indentation of quotes with "quotation marks", line space between paragraphs and paragraph headings, paragraph headings in lower case bold left justified. Endnotes rather than footnotes, which are not appropriate for internet publishing. Please do not use CAPS or underline.

Endnotes and endnote numbering should be entered as text to allow for easy conversion, rather than encrypted as in a word-style document. Hyperlinks can be used to link to sources and references, Do not, however, include attach hyperlinks to endnote numerals. The text of the submission should also appear in default font in the body of the email message. As much as possible avoid unusual codes such as . . . , to facilitate conversion.

The article should include a short biographical blurb (1-3 sentences) on the author at the foot of the article in italics.

Due to the high volume of emails, we are not able to acknowledge individual submissions or communicate editorial decisions. All articles published by Global Research will include an author's copyright note.
