Law comes into force in Romania, enabling deployment of elements of NATO missile defense

Bucharest: In Romania today, came into force a law which enables the country to be deployed elements of the NATO missile defense. That is what the country's foreign policy department announced, quoted by ITAR-TASS.

"The agreement between Romania and the United States to deploy elements of the anti-missile shield entered into force on December 23, 2011," the message reads.

In mid-September, U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton and Romanian Foreign Minister Teodor Baconschi signed an intergovernmental agreement to deploy elements of missile defense within the Deveselu Air Base in Romania.
