In the aftermath of last night's tragic 'terrorist' attack in Nice, France, one of the most popular talking points which has emerged throughout much of the western media coverage is the idea that terrorism is now a 'normal part of our everyday lives' and that a permanent state of military alert at home is something the public needs to get used to.

One of the central voices of this police state talking is French Prime Minister and avid Israeli advocate Manuel Valls. Earlier today Valls stated that, "France has to learn to live with terrorism."

In this way, the security state is attempting to integrate terrorism as a day-to-day 24/7, 365 day per week agenda issue - which is said to require a hyper-militarized security state, just like Israel (notice how Israel is invoked by neoconservatives and western Zionist supports ad nauseam in the security conversation), to deal with 'the threat.'

This seems to be the cornerstone of Valls' political relevance, which he has basically repeated over and over, for the better part of the last two years despite the fact that both the Charlie Hebdo and Paris Bataclan events exhibited very clear signs of GLADIO-style domestic terror stage play.

Back in February, at the Munich Security Conference he stated the exact same thing:

"We have entered - we all feel it - a new era characterised by the lasting presence of 'hyper-terrorism.'

"We must be fully conscious of the threat, and react with a very great force and great lucidity. There will be attacks. Large-scale attacks. It's a certainty. This hyper-terrorism is here to stay."

In January 2016, while addressing an Israeli lobby delegation, Valls read off a list of 'ISIS' terrorist attacks along with other 'terrorist' incidents in Israel, claiming that this was proof that, "we are in a world war", while not ever uttering a word about Israel's brutal, militarized occupation and their systematic ethnic cleansing regime waged against the native Palestinian residents since the creation of the State of Israel in 1948.

Israeli CRIF spokesman Roger Cukierman applauded Valls's single-sided adherence to the Israeli lobby, by saying, "On a number of occasions, you said very powerful things: That anti-Zionism is anti-Semitism, that France without its Jews is no longer France," Cukierman said. "This makes you a dear politician."

Is this a case of the state and its transnational security conglomerates manipulating the public into unquestioningly accepting an indefinite siege mentality and a permanent, full-blown police state?

It appears once again, that we are witnessing an attempt to transform large parts of western society - through a further realignment of public and state political and economic priorities into what is commonly referred to as ""security theatre,"" which, in reality, has nothing to do with actual security, and everything to do with domestic political and geopolitical theatre.
