US President Donald Trump has been roundly mocked for announcing sanctions on Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini... who died 30 years ago.

Trump said in a video released by the White House: “Ayatollah Khomeini and his office will not be spared from the sanctions.”

He went on to say that the measures were a “strong and proportionate response.”

Khomeini served as Supreme Leader until his death in 1989.

Although he most likely meant current Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khomeini, confused Twitter users were quick to point out his mistake:

OMG. You can't make this up. Trump says US is sanctioning Ayatollah Khomeini who died decades ago. He meant Khamenei, of course, but add this to the pile blunders! pic.twitter.com/uDIUrirYt5

Today Trump idiotically hit Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini with sanctions even though he's been dead for 30 years. To be fair, Trump has been dead inside for 30 years so it's understandable that he would make that mistake.

Others used the mistake to laugh at him:

Khomeini when he hears he's been sanctioned (sorry)

Saw Ayatollah Khomeini was trending, knew he's been dead a long time, and said to myself, "This has @realDonaldTrump 's stupidity written all over it."

Others worried about other dead leaders who could also potentially face sanctions from beyond the grave:

Trump just sanctioned the Ayatollah Khomeini. Saddam Hussein must be shaking in his boots right about now.

What's next? Sanctions on Gaddafi, Saddam and Mussolini? Perhaps Santa, the Tooth Fairy and Bigfoot?

— TFA (@nitzafezet) June 25, 2019

This comes as Tehran accused the White House of being 'afflicted with a mental retardation', and called his sanctions "outrageous and idiotic."
