

UK Government Caught Spying on Human Rights Organisations

By Michaela Whitton

Global Research, July 06, 2015

The Anti-Media 3 July 2015

Region: Europe

Theme: Intelligence, Police State & Civil Rights

Edward Snowden didn't just expose the possibility that state surveillance may have intruded into the lives of British citizens. He actually accused U.K. authorities of operating a system where "anything goes," and new details revealed this week confirm his suspicion.

The U.K. government is one of the main culprits for privacy infringement. Mass indiscriminate surveillance programmes include monitoring of emails, calls, internet searches, contact lists, and the gathering of vast amounts of other data that is not essential.

Just over a week ago, Amnesty International issued a press release on a ruling by the U.K. surveillance tribunal. The ruling asserted that the Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ) acted unlawfully by conducting surveillance on two human rights organisations. GCHQ is the government's security and intelligence organisation tasked with protecting the nation from threats.

The tribunal, which was brought against the U.K. government by ten NGOs and included Amnesty International, found the government in breach of its internal surveillance policies. It violated its own policies by accessing and retaining the communications of two NGOs, one in Egypt and one in South Africa.

At the time, Amnesty International's Legal Programme Director, Rachel Logan, said,

"Today's decision revealing GCHQ's unlawful activity raises the wider question as to why the UK intelligence services were intercepting the communications of these two highly regarded human rights NGOs at all. It is hard to imagine how they could legitimately be the target of criminal suspicion. Were they simply victims of mass surveillance - being swept up in indiscriminate trawling? And if so, do we only know about it because the spies failed to follow even their own weak procedures? Were the rest of us rounded up in the same net?"

Her final question, "Were the rest of us rounded up in the same net?" came back to haunt her. It was answered this week in the latest chilling episode of the story as Amnesty itself found out that it, too, has been spied on. Just a week after the tribunal, the Investigatory Powers Tribunal (IPT) informed Amnesty that GCHQ has also been unlawfully intercepting and storing its communications.

On the Amnesty staff blog earlier today, Allan Hogarth said the organisation will now press for the U.K. government to establish an independent inquiry into how and why the intelligence agency has been spying on human rights organisations.

The original source of this article is The Anti-Media
Copyright © Michaela Whitton, The Anti-Media, 2015

---

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: [Michaela
Whitton](#)

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca
www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca