

Varoufakis Resigns as Greek Finance Minister, Not to Hinder Forthcoming Negotiations with Creditors

By RT

Global Research, July 06, 2015

RT 6 July 2015

Region: Europe

Theme: Global Economy

Image: Greek Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis.(Reuters / Alkis Konstantinidis)

After securing a 'no' vote at Greek referendum on bailout, Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis resigned, saying it would help Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras negotiate a better deal with foreign creditors.

"Soon after the announcement of the referendum results, I was made aware of a certain preference by some Eurogroup participants, and assorted 'partners', for my... 'absence' from its meetings; an idea that the prime minister judged to be potentially helpful to him in reaching an agreement. For this reason I am leaving the Ministry of Finance today," he said Monday in an online statement.

He added that he would "wear the creditors' loathing with pride" and pledged his continued support to Tsipras and whoever he chooses as his new finance minister.

One of the reasons for Varoufakis's resignation was reportedly an acute conflict with Jeroen Dijsselbloem, president of the Eurogroup, which includes all the finance ministers of countries in the Eurozone.

A diplomatic source in Brussels told TASS that Varoufakis had "tense relations with individual members of the Eurogroup in the past several weeks, primarily with the body's president." According to the source, Varoufakis's opponents consider that he intentionally protracted the debt talks in order to hold a referendum. "In these conditions there is lack of trust in the main Greek negotiator," the source said.

Varoufakis's successor as finance minister will likely be the chief negotiator in talks with international creditors, Euclid Tsakalotos, a senior government official told Reuters. The appointment of the new finance minister is expected after the meeting of political leaders on Monday.

On Sunday more than 61 percent of Greek voters said no to a bailout plan proposed by foreign creditors, supporting their government's opposition to the plan. The result was praised by the Greek government but lamented elsewhere in the EU, even as foreign officials said they respected the choice of the Greek people. German Economy Minister Sigmar Gabriel said that the vote had "torn down the last bridges on which Greece and Europe could have moved towards a compromise." Germany risks losing some 14 billion euros in revenue from Greek sovereign bonds held by Germany's central bank. Italy's foreign minister, Paolo Gentiloni, urged the EU to keep looking for middle ground with Greece, despite the referendum.

The original source of this article is RT

Copyright © RT, RT, 2015

Comment on Global Research Articles on our Facebook page

Become a Member of Global Research

Articles by: RT

Disclaimer: The contents of this article are of sole responsibility of the author(s). The Centre for Research on Globalization will not be responsible for any inaccurate or incorrect statement in this article. The Centre of Research on Globalization grants permission to cross-post Global Research articles on community internet sites as long the source and copyright are acknowledged together with a hyperlink to the original Global Research article. For publication of Global Research articles in print or other forms including commercial internet sites, contact: publications@globalresearch.ca www.globalresearch.ca contains copyrighted material the use of which has not always been specifically authorized by the copyright owner. We are making such material available to our readers under the provisions of "fair use" in an effort to advance a better understanding of political, economic and social issues. The material on this site is distributed without profit to those who have expressed a prior interest in receiving it for research and educational purposes. If you wish to use copyrighted material for purposes other than "fair use" you must request permission from the copyright owner.

For media inquiries: publications@globalresearch.ca